Subject: Requests for Inside Boulder News

Ashley and Sarah,

If there's room for a short reader this Friday or next, will you please include a short summary about the new map of development review projects? Thanks!

The city uses the Development Review Process to evaluate proposed land uses and development projects in Boulder, and community members have opportunities to help shape the project outcomes at various points throughout the review process.

A new Map of Development Review Projects makes it easier to access information about proposed projects in your neighborhood and elsewhere in Boulder. The map shows all of the project applications that are currently being reviewed by the city, including building permits, historic preservation review, land use review, and zoning adjustments. To view the documents for a specific project, select the colored polygon or type in the address or case number.

In addition to the information provided by the map and online at www.BoulderPlanDevelop.net, the city mails written notifications to the property owners near many of the projects that are being reviewed. The city also posts a public notice sign at the properties being reviewed and issues public notices in the Daily Camera at least 10 days before all public hearings with city boards and City Council.

Got 20 minutes to provide feedback for an ignite talk?

You'll need to call in for sound. You'll see a phone icon, click it for instructions.

I'll update this invite with a join.me link, so you won't have to leave your desk! We need the city employee's perspective to help us nail our message. Forward to anyone you think might have a second to help.

As a part of Housing Boulder's propaganda machine, we're giving an ignite talk in July on Housing Challenges in Boulder, highlighting a possible tool to use that has bubbled up in the working groups, and providing a call to action at the end.

I meant to ask before you got a call, hit me up some time today when you have 15 minutes to spare so I can get your feedback on my rough draft of the ignite.

OK, thanks...Boulder Theater tkts are usually at the box office but let me know if I should go to the door instead.

I plan to get there at 6 to get good seats so I'll check my texts first to see if there are any problems with me getting in.

Break A Leg and Enjoy it! (Just a little bit)

Subject: RE: Do you know about this?? Here's my 2 minute report:

- Becky made this 5 min. presentation last Wed. at Ignite at the Boulder Theater. Nick G. & I attended and several city staff had given her feedback on drafts of her presentation. (I gave Susan a heads up at our meeting Monday.)

- As you will see if you watch the video she was ABUNDANTLY CLEAR that she works for a non-profit that works with local governments and in NO WAY represents the City of Boulder in this presentation.

- The main theme is that people should give a “darn” about their local govt. and that acting locally has more impact than acting globally. She explained how Boulder city gov’t and elections for Council work. She asked how many people voted in the last local election in 2013. She mentioned the ballot items.

- The presentation was extremely well received. Many people have heard buzz in the community – people talking about paying attention to their local government.

- Yes, it had some F words, as many Ignite presentations do.

- There were about 900 people in the audience, many also attending Start Up Week. Since it was taped, it is now available for wider viewing.

I'm happy to discuss this further, but I was there and was very proud of Becky and the enthusiastic audience response she got.
